"Joining the DJSI World Index and the repeat placement on DJSI North America underscores our aim to create positive economic impact through high-value tourism, making our regions better places to live, work and visit," said Robert Goldstein, president and chief operating officer of Las Vegas Sands. "These accomplishments are highly valued in our company and demonstrate our continual drive to be a positive financial contributor and good corporate citizen."

Under the People pillar, Sands strives to be the employer of choice leading the hospitality and tourism industry in its regions by supporting Team Members' personal, professional and financial well-being and building a diverse, equitable and inclusive corporate culture. The company works to create optimum conditions to live, work and visit in its Communities through the Sands Cares community engagement and corporate giving program, which supports programs that build regional resilience, establish a foundation for a thriving local hospitality industry and preserve local culture and heritage. Finally, Sands is committed to ensuring the long-term environmental health of its regions through the Sands ECO360 global sustainability program, which focuses on reducing impact on the Planet through the core areas of green buildings, environmentally responsible operations and green meetings and events.
